Serious and organised crime has wide-ranging social, economic and governance impacts, and these impacts can be severe. Does serious and organised crime really threaten national security and if so, how?

Panelists

Mr Michael Outram, Executive Director, Intelligence and Investigation Programs, Australian Crime Commission.

Professor Roderic Broadhurst, School of Regulation, Justice and Diplomacy, ANU College of Asia and the Pacific.

Professor Adam Graycar, Dean, Australian National Institute for Public Policy, ANU.

Mr John McFarlane, Visiting Fellow, Strategic and Defence Studies Centre, ANU College of Asia and the Pacific.

The panel discussion will be followed by a question and answer session moderated by Professor Michael L'Estrange, Director of the National Security College, ANU.
